St. Olaf College and the War

This issue of THE ST. OLAF COLLEGE BULLETIN publishes a list of names of the St. Olaf men who participated in the late war. It does so to preserve a permanent officially-printed record of the available names of those who responded to their country's call.

As soon as the announcement reached St. Olaf College that our government had declared war on Germany, the institution hoisted the Stars and Stripes on the Main Building, where the flag floated till Germany signed the armistice. Our government at first thought that the United States needed to supply the Allies mainly with foodstuffs and for that reason urged the people to stimulate food production. The collapse of Russia, however, showed that the Allies would have to get men also from America if they were to win the war. The St. Olaf men promptly heeded this call. Up to the present time we have been able to trace 622 St. Olaf men who were in the military service either in this country or overseas at the moment the cessation of hostilities occurred on November 11, 1918. Many of these men fought at Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel, and in the Argonne Woods.

Later, when the military authorities asked the institution to send men to the officers' training school at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, it immediately sent its quota. When the government still later decided to invite the colleges of the land to establish the Students' Army Training Corps, St. Olaf College again complied with the request. It turned Ytterboe Hall into barracks, and next to the University had the largest student training camp in the State of Minnesota.

The St. Olaf people who could not perform military duties contributed their share, however, to effect a quick and successful termination of the war. They partook generously in the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, and Y. M. C. A. drives. They held frequent patriotic rallies where they employed local and outside speakers. Several St. Olaf faculty members spoke in various places thruout the Northwest, urging the people in these communities to aid in a vigorous prosecution of the war. All the college women joined in the Red Cross activities and formed energetic, efficient knitting and surgical dressing groups. During the spring of 1917 the men of St. Olaf were organized into two companies for military drill. These companies were continued during the school year 1917-18. Following immediately upon the June Commencement in 1918, a war institute was conducted for several weeks, preparing young women for an intelligent participation in the war service work which they could do upon returning to their respective home communities.

Every effort has been made to secure the name of every participant in the war. Obviously the record to date is incomplete. If any former St. Olaf student who has taken part in the war sees that his name has been omitted from this Bulletin, he is urged promptly to send in his name and the history of his service. Address: St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minnesota. We wish to place such names in a subsequent bulletin.

The Students' Army Training Corps

When the German armies invaded Belgium and France, it was necessary for the allies to meet the danger as quickly and as effectively as possible. All the available strength in resources and men was almost immediately focused upon war. There was little time for a selective system. The great need was in the army, and as a result the men of England and France from farm, industry, and school joined the army to stop the German advance.

The allies, however, soon became aware of the fact that modern war is not carried on only in the front line trenches, and that to carry on war successfully, the whole nation must be organized into a great co-operative machine of intellectual, economic, and military power.

The problem of organizing the nation along this line became a matter of great concern. The number of students in the universities during the first years of the war became increasingly small; the need was felt for men of better training in industry; the problem of providing able leaders for the army was a difficult one. The attention was turned toward the schools. But the men who should have been in the schools were in the army. A great readjustment was necessary.

In order to avoid some of the difficulties experienced by the allies the United States instituted the selective draft. The idea of the draft was to select men for the army in a democratic manner and also to select them for the particular work which they could do best. The result of this system was that men were selected not only to go into the army but to remain upon the farm, in industry, and in the schools. All lines of production were to be made to produce to the utmost capacity. The colleges and universities were brought into line to contribute to the winning of the war.

But to organize the colleges for this purpose was not an easy task. The danger was that the schools would either be deprived of their academic character or that they would fail to serve any military purpose. To meet this difficulty a dual control was instituted. The president of the college was to remain in control of the academic section and the commandant was placed in charge of the men, who were organized into a military unit. In order to make this arrangement a success it was necessary for the authorities to adjust the work in the two sections in the best possible manner.

This adjustment led to many difficulties. The college had to be equipped to care for the physical welfare of the men. A great amount of new equipment had to be provided. The curriculum had to be arranged so as to satisfy the military needs both as to time and subject matter. The military unit was open only to Sept. 12, 1918, registrants. This made the induction of the men into the Army Training Corps simultaneously with their entrance upon their academic duties impossible. As a result the late induction of the men interfered to a considerable extent with their school duties. The influenza also made successful work impossible. And when the influenza was brought under control, the armistice was signed.

The military unit in the college was given the name: "The Students' Army Training Corps." This corps was under the control of the "Committee on Special Training," Washington, D. C. The corps was open to men between 18 and 21 years of age. The men of St. Olaf were organized into such a unit. Appropriate and impressive ceremonies marked the formal establishment of the Students' Army Training Corps on the College campus Oct. 1, 1918. There were four officers and 228 men in the unit, organized into two companies. Company "A" was quartered in the east end of Ytterboe Hall, and Company "B" in the west end. During the influenza epidemic the old Main was taken into use as barracks, while Hoyme Chapel and Ytterboe Hall were used as hospitals. The dining room in Ytterboe Hall was set aside exclusively for military mess and study hall.

Much has been said concerning the success and failure of "The Students' Army Training Corps." There were many things about the system that were not satisfactory to any one; but it was a very definite attempt to avoid some of the difficulties encountered by the European countries. It is difficult for any one, in view of the necessarily late induction, the influenza, and the armistice, to say that the system of dual control was a failure. It is more reasonable to suppose that, had the war gone on, the authorities would have been able to adjust most of the difficulties and would have placed the system on a good working basis. There is no doubt that the German command had heard also concerning the organization of "The Students' Army Training Corps," and that it realized also from this preparation that the people of the United States were determined to see the war thru to victory.

War Work

It was obvious that the momentous fact of April 6, 1917, the entrance of the United States into the world war should reflect itself in the student life of the college, both in the modification and even temporary abandonment of traditional activities, as well as in the introduction of new forms of student enterprise.

The introduction of military training and the establishment, in the fall of 1918, of the Students' Army Training Corps marked, of course, the most radical departure from traditional student life. But aside from this distinctly military form of service which the college rendered, there was from the very outset a constant readjustment of student life and activity to conform with new conditions, demands and opportunities for service. Literary society work took on a new aspect. War and service programs predominated. The social life of the college was greatly simplified. Immediately the students concerned voted to dispense with the annual Junior-Senior banquet and to contribute the money that would have been expended, to the gymnasium fund. Similarly other customary society and class functions were eliminated and in lieu of them, the money contributed to the Red Cross or other war work funds. Such social gatherings as were held were marked by extreme simplicity.

The following pledge card, drawn up in the fall of 1917 and signed by a majority of the young women of the college, may be of interest as indicative of the spirit they manifested.

ST. OLAF COLLEGE WOMEN'S WAR WORK PLEDGE

I pledge myself to serve my country in all ways possible for me during this my college year 1917-18.

1. I will do all in my power to maintain for myself the highest standards of womanhood, physical, intellectual, social, and spiritual in order that I may be a truly efficient citizen.
2. I will join the "food savers' army."
  - a. By giving up the use of candies and ice cream
  - b. By reducing lunches to an absolute minimum.
3. I will do all I am able along the following lines of Red Cross work :
  - a. Taking out membership.
  - b. Knitting for the Red Cross.
  - c. Surgical Dressing.
  - d. First Aid.
4. I will eliminate all unnecessary expenditures in order that I may give my full share to the financial support of other war and relief funds.

Liberty Loan.

Red Cross.

Y. M. C. A. Welfare Work.

Soldiers' Library.

Foreign Missions.

X-Ray Machine. (Local campaign).

Lutheran National Commission for Soldiers' and Sailors' Welfare.

5. I will at all times demonstrate by speech as well as by action my patriotism and loyalty to my country.

While military drill was instituted for the young men, the work of the young women was centered largely in the Red Cross. The organization of five classes in First Aid scarcely more than a week after our entrance into the war, marks the beginning of Red Cross work at the college. Much thanks is due Drs. W. P. Lee, I. F. Seeley, W. A. Hunt and F. M. Babcock, practicing physicians in the city, who very generously gave of their valuable time to instruct and examine these classes. At the opening of the college year in the fall of 1918, the organization of the St. Olaf College Auxiliary of the Red Cross was completed. Following were the officers: Miss Gertrude M. Hilleboe, Director; Miss Nina Hegge, President; Miss Ethel Ulvin, Secretary; Miss Olga Larson, Treasurer. The membership of the auxiliary included the entire student body.

A course for supervisors of surgical dressings was arranged for, with Mrs. W. O. Storli of Minneapolis as instructor. The young women completing this course were then placed in charge of the workroom and the dressings made under their supervision. Altogether 18,000 dressings and influenza masks were made by the St. Olaf College Red Cross. A considerable amount of knitting was also done. Classes in First Aid were continued and Red Cross classes in "Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick" and "Home Dietetics" were also conducted, the former by Mrs. Randolph Holland and Sister Ovidia Olson, the latter by Miss Minnie Anderson. Altogether 315 Red Cross certificates have been issued to date for completion of work in these three courses. Under the auspices of the St. Olaf auxiliary several benefits to secure Red Cross funds, notable among which was a patriotic pageant, "The Spirit of America," were given. The participation of the Red Cross members together with the St. Olaf College Cadet Corps and Military Band, all in uniform in various patriotic parades is another form of patriotic service that it has rendered on several occasions. In connection with this brief account of some of the work of the St. Olaf College Red Cross it might not be amiss to mention the fact that the college was prominently represented also in the Northfield Chapter of the Red Cross thru Dr. Geo. W. Spohn, Chairman of the chapter and Miss Constance Norby, Home Service Secretary.

Another type of war service on the part of the young women that merits mention was the special work done along the line of food conservation, aside from the program of individual and group economy referred to above. A lecture and laboratory course, outlined and directed by the U. S. Food Administration, was given by Miss Anderson for the Senior women.

The course concluded with a very excellent series of public demonstrations and talks by the members of the class. At the Commencement Class Day exercises the young women, forty in number, were awarded certificates issued by the United States Food Administration, in recognition of the work done.

The primary object of the Red Cross and Federal Food Conservation courses was to fit the young women for rendering the most efficient home war service. The work proved so valuable that it was decided to give thru the college to all such young women as might be interested, whether regularly enrolled at the college or not, an opportunity to take this work. As a result a War Service Institute giving intensive training along these lines was conducted June 5 to 22, 1918, just after the close of the collegiate year. This venture as far as we have been able to ascertain was quite unique. The Red Cross Headquarters manifested their interest in it by sending down a representative of the Home Service Department to give a series of lectures at the institute. Following is a list of the courses given and the instructors in each :

War Problems, Dr. C. A. Mellby; First Aid, Dr. E. R. Cook; Home Nursing, Mrs. R. Holland; Food Conservation courses, Miss Minnie Anderson; Surgical Dressings, Supervisors' Course, Mrs. H. L. Cruttenden. In addition a number of very instructive and inspirational addresses, musical and literary programs were given. The success of this rather novel institute was very gratifying to all concerned.

There has been nothing pretentious to record in this brief survey of college war work. For after all, the greatest service that college students as students could render was to perform their daily tasks, more conscientiously, more purposively, more efficiently than ever before. Yet, in the various way that have been indicated an opportunity was given for expressing in some tangible form something of that which stirred their souls, something of their desire to serve, to do their part as far as it was possible in the midst of their academic duties.
